

April 2012

Did you know the University of North Dakota features an internationally recognized aeronautics program that trains pilots from all over the world? Thousands of pilots have graduated from UND Aerospace and are employed in all forms of aviation.

University of North Dakota

UND boasts the largest non-military training fleet in the world – 130 planes and simulators – and its students have won 16 of the last 26 national flying safety competitions that pit student pilots from around the nation against each other. UND also offers the only undergraduate degree in unmanned aircraft systems in the world and works closely with the United States Air Force Predator and Global Hawk aircraft.
